So there was this man in Bulgaria who drove trains for a living. He loved his job. Driving a train had been his dream ever since he was a child. He loved to make the train go as fast as possible. Unfortunately, one day he was a little too reckless and caused a crash. He made it, but twenty people died. Well, needless to say, he lost his job back driving the train. After eating the bananas, he was strapped into the electric chair. The switch was pulled, sparks flew, and smoke filled the room - and the man was once again unharmed. He, well, at the time, there was a failed execution. He felt like a failed executioner. “I’ve had it with you and your stupid bananas and walking out of here unharmed. I’m not giving you a thing to eat, we’re strapping you in and doing this now.” Well, it was against protocol, but the man was strapped in to the electric chair without a last meal. The switch was pulled, sparks flew, smoke filled the room - and the man was still unharmed. The execution was speechless. The man looked at the executioner and said, “Oh, the bananas had nothing to do with it. I’m just a bad conductor.”

A guy is late for an important meeting. But he can’t find a place to park. In desperation, he begins to pray. “Please Lord, if you help me find a parking stall right now, I promise to go to church every Sunday and never drink vodka again!” A moment later, a beautiful empty spot right next to the entrance. “Never mind. Found one!”

A woman has twins and gives them up for adoption. One of them goes to a family in Egypt and is named Amal. The other goes to a family in Spain. They name him Juan.

A few years later, Juan sends a picture of himself to his birth mother. Upon receiving the picture, she tells her husband that she wishes she also had a picture of Amal. He responds, “They’re twins! If you’ve seen Juan, you’ve seen Amal.”

The switch was strapped into the electric chair. The switch was pulled, sparks flew, smoke filled the room - and the man was once again unharmed. Well, this of course meant that he was free to go. And once again, he somehow managed to get his old job back. To what should have been the surprise of no-one, he crashed yet another train and killed three people. And so he once again found himself being sentenced to death. On the day of his execution, he requested his final meal: three bananas. “You know what? No,” said the executioner. “I’ve had it with you and your stupid bananas and walking out of here unharmed. I’m not giving you a thing to eat, we’re strapping you in and doing this now.” Well, it was against protocol, but the man was strapped in to the electric chair without a last meal. The switch was pulled, sparks flew, smoke filled the room - and the man was still unharmed. The execution was speechless. The man looked at the executioner and said, “Oh, the bananas had nothing to do with it. I’m just a bad conductor.”

More good news from the Department of Corrections as I have held this back for a while. The prisoner that have held this back for a while has escaped from H unit years now. The prisoner that have held this back for a while.

I believe that Donald Trump and Kim Jumgum the leader that would like to blast us off the face of the earth have the same barber. Man what great hair cuts. Trump in my opinion is a liar. Come on Democrats lets take our nation back.

I am sitting here watching the council meeting, and they are talking about parking problems downtown and they are going to fix parking zones and parking meters and changing the parking. We may have Parking Wans like on TV, boots on cars, towing cars away and tickets. You never know what is going to happen here in McAlester. You just never know.

I am sorry about this teacher who decided to walk out? School because the teachers never know.

No body likes this day in the morning and to be tired and sleepy. No body likes this day in the morning and to be tired and sleepy. Light savings time. You lose an hour early now every morning and to be tired and sleepy. Nothing like this day light savings time. You lose a valuable hour of sleep each day. It is a bunch of bull. Where is our elected officials to get this law changed.

Drug copays sometimes exceed costs

Insurance companies may be asking people to shell out more money for drug co-payments than the drugs actually cost, a new study suggests. Generic drug co-payments in the U.S. exceeded the cost of medicines about 6 percent of the time, they report in JAMA.

“This is money that patients could be saving if they knew about and could avoid the practice,” said lead study author Karen Van Nuijs of the Schaeffer Center for Health Policy and Economics at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. While some people might not notice the overpayment because their medicines cost only $5 or $10 with insurance, added costs at the drugstore could make it even harder for some low-income patients to afford their medicines and might lead them to skip doses, delay refills or stop taking drugs altogether.

“Particularly for patients who struggle to afford their prescription drugs, even modest savings would be helpful,” Van Nuijs said by email.

For the study, researchers examined 2013 data on the average prices retail pharmacies get paid for filling prescriptions for people with private health insurance as well as the co-payments, or out-of-pocket fees, patients paid for their medicines.

Out of $8.5 million claims for prescription drugs, 2.2 million involved overpayments, the study found.

 Altogether, the overpayments totaled $135 million, or about $18.51 per person.

The average overpayment was $7.89. Overpayments exceeded $10 in about 17 percent of claims.

For brand-name drugs, overpayments weren’t as common, but they were higher on average at $13.46, compared with average overpayments of $7.32 for generic drugs.

The most commonly prescribed drug, the painkiller hydrocodone with acetaminophen, involved overpayment in one-third of cases, with an average overpayment of $6.84. Twelve of the 20 most commonly prescribed drugs involved overpayment rates above 33 percent.

Limitations of the study include the potential for pricing in 2013 to be different than what it would be today, the authors note.

It’s also important to recognize that using generic drugs can offer patients effective treatments at lower costs than similar brand-name alternatives, said Aaron Kesselheim, a researcher at Harvard Medical School in Boston who wasn’t involved in the study.

While previous research has linked high drug costs to an increased likelihood that poor people will stop taking medicines, the amount of the overpayments found in the current study might not be large enough to change patient behavior, Kesselheim said by email.

Cost-related non-adherence is usually more of an issue when there’s a choice “between extremely inexpensive generic drugs and extremely expensive brand-name drugs, not on average about $8 differences between co-payments and negotiated reimbursement for generic drugs,” Kesselheim said.

To avoid overpayments, patients should always ask the pharmacist if their costs would be lower if they paid cash instead of using their insurance, said Stacie Dusetzina, a health policy researcher at Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville, Tennessee.

“Pharmacists might not be allowed to offer this information to patients due to ‘gag clauses’ but if patients ask, pharmacists can tell them,” Dusetzina, who wasn’t involved in the study, said by email.

“Several states have banned these practices and allow pharmacists to offer this information but even if you live in one of those states, you should ask,” Dusetzina added. “Patients can also use pricing tools on the internet like GoodRx.com to see what prices they could expect across a variety of pharmacies if they paid cash.”

USDA Invests $276 Million in Rural Electric Infrastructure

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue announced today the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) is investing $276 million in rural electric infrastructure (PDF; 60 KB) to improve system efficiency and reliability. This announcement comes the day before Secretary Perdue is set to testify alongside Secretaries Wilbur Ross, Alexander Acosta, Elaine Chao and Rick Perry at a Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation hearing focused on rebuilding American infrastructure.

Investing in our nation’s electric infrastructure is fundamental for rural economic growth," Secretary Perdue said. “USDA’s longstanding partnerships with rural electric cooperatives help ensure that rural areas have affordable, reliable electric service. These investments also increase efficiency and productivity for businesses and residents, and support the quality of life in rural America.”

USDA’s $276 million investment will build nearly 1,000 miles of line and improve 733 miles of line to most current and future needs of rural businesses and residents. It will also support $65 million in smart grid technologies to help rural electric utilities reduce outages and integrate new systems. Smart grid includes technological enhancements such as metering, substation automation, computer applications, two-way communications and geospatial information systems.

Investments are being made In Colorado, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Minnesota, Missouri, North Dakota, Ohio and Virginia. The loan guarantees are being provided through USDA Rural Development’s Electric Program, which is the successor to the Rural Electrification Administration.

The Department is awarding a $74 million loan to Jackson County Rural Electric Membership Corporation in Brownstown, Ind. The utility will build 84 miles of line and improve 32 miles to provide reliable, affordable electricity to 28,000 residential and business consumers. The loan includes $9.3 million for smart grid technologies. Kentucky’s Shelby Energy Cooperative is receiving a $22.3 million loan to build 60 miles of line, improve 52 miles and make other system improvements. The loan amount includes $884,199 for smart grid projects. Shelby serves 15,275 residential, 509 commercial and 125 seasonal consumers across 2,128 miles in 10 counties between Louisville and Lexington. Shelby’s service territory is largely rural. Its economy relies on agriculture and a fairly large service area.

Bedford Solar received a $3 million USDA loan to build a three megawatt solar plant to provide electricity to a small rural town in Virginia. Built on a brownfield, Bedford Solar has helped stimulate local economic growth and development. It began providing electricity in January 2018, reducing energy costs, attracting new business and creating local jobs. In April 2017, President Donald J. Trump established the Interagency Task Force on Agriculture and Rural Prosperity to identify legislative, regulatory and policy changes that could promote agriculture and prosperity in rural communities. In January 2018, Secretary Perdue presented the Task Force’s findings to President Trump. These findings included 31 recommendations to align the federal government with state, local and tribal governments to take...

USDA Decides Not to Impose Additional Regulatory Requirements for Organic Producers and Handlers

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) today announced the decision to withdraw the Organic Livestock and Poultry Practices (OLPP) final rule published on January 19, 2017. The rule would have increased federal regulation of livestock and poultry for certified organic producers and handlers. The withdrawal becomes effective May 13, 2018.

Significant policy and legal issues were identified after the rule published in January 2017. After careful review and two rounds of public comment, USDA has determined that the rule exceeds the Department’s statutory authority, and that the changes to the existing organic regulations could have a negative effect on voluntary participation in the National Organic Program, including real costs for producers and consumers.

“The existing robust organic livestock and poultry regulations are effective,” said USDA Marketing and Regulatory Program Undersecretary Greg Gervais. “The organic industry’s continued growth domestically and globally shows that consumers trust the current approach that balances consumer expectations and the needs of organic producers and handlers.” According to USDA reports for 2017, the number of certified organic operations increased domestically by seven percent and globally by 11 percent. Industry estimates show that organic sales in the United States reached almost $47 billion in 2016, reflecting an increase of almost $3.7 billion since 2015. The Department carefully considered public comments and the relative costs and benefits for both producers and consumers of imposing the proposed additional regulations.

This is the sixth news article of a series that will continue over the next few weeks. I hope your journey of making "Small Steps to Health and Wealth" continues this week as we think about making big sacrifices...yes, you read that correctly, sacrifice. It's no wonder that many people turn to quick fixes or weight-loss programs but are often disappointed with the results. The truth is, making long-term changes requires conscious effort and commitment.

Let's start with your health. Energy balance is the difference between the energy you consume and the energy that your body uses. This energy is measured in calories. For example, you might consume 1500 calories a day from food and beverages and use 1300 calories daily in exercise and daily activities. This means you are in a calorie deficit and will lose weight over time.

To lose weight, you must maintain a "negative energy balance" by burning more calories than you consume. This requires a change in behavior, and it's about making small changes over time. Let's talk about some examples.

Combining Positive Behavior Changes

Losing 10 pounds in a year can be accomplished by combining positive behavior changes such as eating less and exercising more. This translates into a one-year weight loss of 365 pounds or 100 calories a day.

Here are some common activities and the number of calories that can be burned: 1) brisk walking (4 mph) for 10 minutes can burn off 100 calories. 2) bicycling 13 miles (612) can burn off 254 calories. 3) jogging (7 mph) for 30 minutes can burn off 529 calories.

Combining Positive Behavior Changes

Similarly, 45 minutes of brisk (4 mph) walking burns up about 244 calories. This is done every day, 89,060 extra calories are burned in a year (91,000 divided by 3,500).

Combining Positive Behavior Changes

Between 1960 and 2002, the average number of calories consumed per person per day increased from 2448 to 3420 calories. This is a significant increase and accounts for the rise in obesity rates. On average, people consume 800,000 to 900,000 calories per year. Losing weight requires a calorie deficit, where your energy intake is less than your energy output.

Combining Positive Behavior Changes

The math is pretty simple. Each pound of body fat contains 3,500 calories. In order to lose one pound, a person needs to burn 3,500 calories. This translates into a one-year weight loss of 365 pounds or 100 calories a day.

Combining Positive Behavior Changes

This is the six times article of a series that will continue over the next few weeks. I hope your journey of making "Small Steps to Health and Wealth" continues this week as we think about making big sacrifices...yes, you read that correctly, sacrifice. It's no wonder that many people turn to quick fixes or weight-loss programs but are often disappointed with the results. Magellan Midstream Considers Expansion of Texas Operations

Tulsa’s Magellan Midstream Partners is reaching out to potential customers for a possible expansion of the company’s western leg of its pipeline system in Texas. The company recently launched an open season to assess customer interest. Those who might become customers of such a proposed expanded pipeline have until May 9 to make binding commitments. The company says it hopes to have the expanded line operational by mid-2020.

The proposed expansion would increase Magellan’s capability to transport refined petroleum products, such as gasoline and diesel fuel, from Gulf Coast refineries to demand centers in Abilene, Midland/Odessa and El Paso, Texas, with further optionality to access markets in the states of New Mexico and Arizona, as well as international markets in Mexico via connections to other pipelines owned by Magellan and third parties. The pipeline’s current capacity of 100,000 barrels per day (bpd) could increase to 140,000 bpd following the expansion.

The Goal of Creating More Jobs in Oklahoma

In the February edition of the State Treasurer Ken Miller is Oklahoma Economic Report, praising Gov. Mary Fallin for her efforts to create more jobs in Oklahoma.

“Gov. Mary Fallin has taken an active role in luring businesses to bring quality jobs to Oklahoma,” she wrote. “Data from the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission show that between January 2017 and January 2018 Oklahoma added 25,000 jobs. Gov. Fallin also had a guest commentary in Miller’s monthly newsletter in which she focused on adding more jobs to the state’s economy.

“The state’s energy sector is improving, and our state’s business climate is healthy. Our pro-business policies are attracting a wide variety of jobs and businesses to the state, which are diversifying our economy.”

The Governor noted that last year, new and existing companies announced a total of more than $6 billion in new investments, while previous year, new and existing companies announced a total of $5.8 billion in new investments.

The Governor noted that last year, new and existing companies announced a total of more than $6 billion in new investments. Of the 83 public announcements, 36 were from new companies moving into the state in 2017. She said the investments could eventually lead to 3,500 new jobs.

“The previous year, in 2016, 66 announcements were made statewide, which totaled $2.2 billion in investments with 14 coming from companies new to Oklahoma. More than 5,200 jobs are expected from those announcements,” wrote the governor. “Government in and of itself does not create jobs, but it should provide the right environment to grow the economy through a free-market system, unfettered by burdensome regulations.”
